FDR and the New Deal

81 years and still going strong

IF YOU WERE A MAN WITH A FAMILY TO support in 1933, life was close to unendurable. Although a pound of hamburger cost only 15 cents, if your total take-home pay was $12 a week or less, it was hard to feed a family with young, growing children. Some of those who couldn't find a job rode the rails looking for work—any kind. It was an era of "make it over, wear it out, make it do, or do without." A large number of families did without and were desperate.

Eighty-one years ago, newly elected President Franklin Delano Roosevelt (FDR) authorized a bundle of federal aid programs as an effort to raise the country out of despair. The Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933 eventually encompassed the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC), the Rural Electrification Administration (REA), the Public Works Administration

Franklin Delano Roosevelt, 32nd president of the United States, 1882–1945

(PWA) and the Work Progress Administration (WPA) to aid the country. Altogether, this was called The New Deal.

South Carolina benefited from the New Deal in many ways, the most tangible benefit to rural families was the REA. Starting in 1936, it provided monies for electrical distribution systems in the agricultural areas of our state. At that time, electricity was largely available in cities and towns provided by for-profit utility companies, leaving would-be consumers in the country to fend for themselves.

Neighbors from the rural areas joined forces and formed their own non-profit, member-owned cooperatives to provide the blessings of electricity to the countryside. These member-owned cooperatives purchased power wholesale and distributed it using their own lines. Pee Dee Electric Cooperative was incorporated in December 1939. Today, we are one of 20 electric distribution co-ops in South Carolina.

As we celebrate 75 years of service to the Pee Dee in 2014, we also honor the memory of one of our greatest presidents, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, the man who led the charge to provide power to the people of rural America.
